Executive Director
The very first question the Curator of Education Hilary May asks the student groups who visit the Museum of Early Trades & Crafts is, “What do you think this building was originally used for?” Looking at the James Library building, built in 1899, it is difficult to determine if the museum was originally a church, a schoolhouse, or a building from Hogwarts! Just about all the visitors who are unfamiliar with the building’s history are surprised that it was built as a library – the first public library in Madison, N.J. D. Willis James, a philanthropist and summer resident of Madison decided that the borough needed a library as a means of “public enjoyment and benefit”. He also felt that the building should inspire learning. What resulted is a building in the Richardsonian Romanesque Revival style created by architects Willard Alden and Charles Brigham that certainly stands out on the quiet main street of shops, restaurants, and antique stores. The Richardsonian style was named for architect Henry Hobson Richardson who popularized this ornate style in the late 1800s. This style has several unique architectural features including semicircular arches, groin vaults, narrow windows, and a cruciform floor plan not usually found outside of churches. The clock tower, accessible by one of the two circular staircases, contains a Seth Thomas clock that still runs by its original weights. The manual winding mechanism was electrified in 1991. What makes the building’s design even more unusual are the 56 stained glass windows and stenciled brick from floor to ceiling and wall to wall. Imbedded within the stained glass windows and painted on the walls are quotations taken from the words of the Bible, Shakespeare, Longfellow, Disraeli, Dionysius, and Mann, among many other philosophers, wordsmiths, and poets. The area on the lower level of the building was the periodicals room containing newspapers in many languages. This served the large immigrant population in the area and the room remained open from seven in the morning to ten at night to accommodate the working people in town. The Free Public Library of the Borough of Madison opened on Memorial Day, 1900.

The story of D. Willis James is one of sharp business acumen and philanthropy. He was born in England in 1832, attended school in Scotland and moved to New York to enter the family business. His company rapidly expanded as exports from America shaped the new economy and he became quite wealthy. He was a religious man and believed in giving back to God and his fellow man. In addition to building the library, he was involved in the Children’s Aid Society, the Union Theological Seminary, and Amherst College.

In 1967, a new, modern library was built in Madison to serve the growing population and, that housed more books, periodicals, and resource materials. With the James Library vacated Edgar and Agnes Land, Madison residents and avid collectors of 18th and 19th century artifacts, partnered with the Borough and created the Museum. The Lands had amassed more than four thousand early tools and artifacts made and used by residents of New Jersey. The Museum of Early Trades and Crafts was officially chartered in 1969 and opened to the public in 1970 with permanent exhibits and craft demonstrations showing how people lived, worked, and traveled in the 18th and 19th centuries. Since its opening, the building has undergone a few major renovations, including a massive restoration project that is still ongoing. Nearly fifty years later, the Museum has doubled its collection size and receives nearly 10,000 visitors per year. METC still focuses on its original mission to teach visitors the story of the people who lived and worked here hundreds of years ago, and to make these individuals' stories resonate with 21st-century people.

The interior of the museum is stenciled with this or complimentary pattern from floor to ceiling and wall to wall “...soothes and interest the worried mortal until all sense of the outer world has departed.” (The Madison Eagle, September 28, 1900)

Tuckerton Seaport Nature Trail

You’ve seen the Tucker’s Island Lighthouse, strolled the boardwalk, and visited Jay Parker’s Carving Shed, but have you seen the Seaport’s Nature Trail? This little-known feature of the seaport is more than just a walk through the woods. The ½-mile trail not only showcases the many native trees, plants, and birds found in the Barnegat Bay and Pinelands, but also the history of the baymen who utilized these natural resources to work the cycle of the seasons.

To showcase this rich occupational history, the nature trail features “snowmen,” crafted from trees felled by Hurricane Sandy, posed in scenes representing the seasonal occupations of the people on the bay: clammers using clam tongs to harvest the bay; eelers wielding eel spears; fisherman, complete with rods and nets; carvers creating decoys for hunting; and quilters sewing warm quilts for the cold winter months. Each of these activities was necessary and integral to the lives of the region’s residents.

You will also see ice saws that created large blocks of ice that were stored and used to preserve fish in the summer months; portable sawmills used throughout the Pine Barrens to cut Atlantic white cedar for crafting boats, decoys, and houses; and pinecones and holly gathered for decorative endeavors.

So, the next time you think you’ve seen all that the seaport has to offer, grab the “Nature Trail Scavenger Hunt” guide from the seaport’s visitor center and head toward the trail entrance by Perrine’s Boat Works. Keep your eyes peeled for the trail markers and the snowmen!
March League Meeting in Stone Harbor a Great Success

Invited by the Stone Harbor Museum, members of the League of Historical Societies of New Jersey held their spring meeting at the Stephen C. Ludlam Post 331 of the American Legion on Saturday, March 17. The Avalon History Center and the American Legion joined in hosting the event.

Forty representatives from historical societies throughout the state attended the meeting, which was called to order by President Jane McNeill and conducted by Executive Director Linda Barth. Prior to the opening of the meeting, the group was welcomed by Vice-President Terrie Cwik at left (first photo) of the Stone Harbor Museum and Stone Harbor Mayor Judith Davies-Dunhour (at right).

After the League business meeting, Nina Ranalli, director of the Avalon History Center (center left), narrated a pictorial history of Avalon. Then Director/Curator Bruce Tell (center right) of the Stone Harbor Museum presented a program about the history of Stone Harbor. As a trustee of the board of the League of Historical Societies of New Jersey, Bruce represents the Southern district.

Following a delicious lunch, the attendees were treated to a tour of the Military Museum of the Legion. Legionnaires also showed guests the history of life saving at the shore, since the building was the old Tatham Life Saving Station, the oldest building in Stone Harbor, New Jersey.

The day concluded with a trolley tour of Avalon and Stone Harbor, including stops at the Avalon History Center and the Stone Harbor Museum.

Dick Pike & crowd tour the life saving station. (Dick is a co-founder of the Tatham's Life Saving Station and Museum.)

The June League meeting in Bridgewater will focus on the Continental Army’s two visits to Middlebrook. Below, historian Jessie Havens explains the first, six-week encampment. The second, a six-month cantonment, will be described during the meeting.

FIRST MIDDLEBROOK ENCAMPMENT
May 28-July 3, 1777
By Jessie Havens

Bringing an untrained, poorly equipped army in no condition for a fight to the valley of the Middle Brook in June 1777 when a powerful army twice as large was only ten miles away was as much an act of daring by George Washington as crossing the Delaware the previous December, perhaps even more so. There he had been initiating action, while here he could only wait to see what his act of defiance would provoke.

The steep slopes of the Watchungs sheltered this Middlebrook encampment from frontal attack, but its west flank had no protection other than redoubts that could have been easily overrun. This vulnerability was obvious to the enemy, but Sir William Howe no longer possessed the zeal that had earned him high regard and command of Britain’s effort to pacify the American colonies. He sought instead an easier victory by pretending to launch an advance on Philadelphia, a ploy that Washington rightly judged to be of no consequence. He declined to take the bait.

That ruse having failed, Howe signaled intent to quit New Jersey and fight the war elsewhere by abandoning New Brunswick and starting to ferry his army from Perth Amboy to Staten Island. Washington, although doubtless eager to speed Howe on his way, wisely held back most of his forces from pursuit; and sure enough, Howe launched a two-pronged attack back across the plains. Fight-and-run tactics and punishing heat soon ended it, and with that Howe embarked his army and sailed away, leaving New Jersey free once more, six months after it was subjugated by Howe’s army of occupation.

Middlebrook, despite the fact that it caps a monumentally successful six-month campaign, has been largely disregarded, other than by Sir William Howe, who claimed it as an excuse for bungling his pacification of the colonies, and by Bound Brook, where it has been annually celebrated as the place where our nation’s flag first flew. (Neither claim is supported by facts.)

Middlebrook’s significance is further obscured by Washington’s return to the Raritan Valley in 1778-79 to set up winter cantonments on the south flank of the Watchungs. That episode, which has become known as Middlebrook, is commonly combined with the previous encampment on the other side of the mountain. Thus obscured, the Middlebrook encampment of 1777 has little chance to become justly famous despite its boldness and success because it was the culmination of a strategy, and not a singular event.
This day-long workshop will examine national, state, county, and municipal efforts at recognizing and preserving America’s fields of conflict. Using camps, fortifications, and battlefields of the American Revolution as case studies, the day will include a morning of presentations from historians, archaeologists, and county planners. Topics will include (1) an overview of national movement for battlefield preservation, (2) battlefield preservation on the state/county/municipality level, including heritage areas, and specific battlefield studies, such as Trenton, Red Bank, Princeton, Brandywine, and others, (3) use of archaeology in battlefield studies, and (4) the role of community in battlefield preservation, including study, inventory, awareness, stewardship, and heritage tourism.

New from the New Jersey Historic Trust

The Board of the New Jersey Historic Trust approved $4,990,934 in grant recommendations from the Preserve New Jersey Historic Preservation Fund for 18 preservation planning projects and 34 “bricks and mortar” capital preservation projects located at historic sites throughout the state. The grants were presented to the Garden State Preservation Trust at its annual meeting on October 17, 2017. The action requires a Legislative appropriations bill and the Governor’s approval before funds are available. “We are pleased to offer preservation funding to so many worthy projects in this grant round,” said Historic Trust Executive Director Dorothy P. Guzzo. “The projects represent a wide variety of building types in 18 counties. Each grant round is highly competitive, and we received requests totaling $11.5 million this year. There is still tremendous need for financial support of historic preservation at the state, county and local levels.”

New Jersey’s Vintage Base Ball Clubs — Why not invite them to your site

Since baseball was invented in New Jersey, why not invite one of our vintage base ball (yes, two words) teams to your historic site?

Played at Elysian Fields in Hoboken on June 19, 1846, the first game was won by the New York Knickerbockers in a 23 to 1 rout of the New York Base Ball Club.

Today, team members spend many weekends playing by the original rules that were in use in 1864, although sometimes they use rules from the late 1850s, the 1880s, or even the 1890s. Among our many vintage clubs are the Flemington Neshanocks (photo left), the Hoboken Nine (photo right), Minerva Base Ball Club of Bridgeton (lower center), and the Elizabeth Resolutes (lower left).

Other Garden State teams include the Monmouth Furnace club (lower right), and the brand new Liberty Base Ball Club, which will play its inaugural season at East Jersey Old Town in Piscataway.

In the 19th century, the umpire was respected, not a target of abuse. The players made the safe and out calls at the bases. But when the players disputed a call, the umpire stepped in with a final judgment—and that was that.

Today’s vintage clubs play without gloves. The umpire may wear a top hat. And maybe, as in the old days, a player will be fined six cents for swearing.

To learn more, just Google the team for contact information and schedules.

Funding for the current grant round comes from the Preserve New Jersey Historic Preservation Fund, which is supported by income from the corporate business tax. All grantees are nonprofit organizations or entities of municipal, county, and state government. The Preserve New Jersey Fund replaced the Garden State Historic Preservation Trust Fund. To be eligible for an award from the New Jersey Preservation Fund projects must be listed or eligible to be listed on the New Jersey and National Register of Historic Places, either individually or within designated historic districts.

Established in 1967, the New Jersey Historic Trust is the only nonprofit historic preservation organization in New Jersey created by state law. Its mission is to advance historic preservation in New Jersey for the benefit of future generations through education, stewardship, and financial investment programs that save New Jersey’s heritage and strengthen the state’s communities. The Historic Trust seeks to achieve its mission by serving as a leading voice for preservation at the state level; a catalyst for preservation and community revitalization activities; a full partner in state policy development; and a technical and financial resource for the stewardship of historic properties. Since 1990, the Trust has committed $145 million to more than 750 preservation projects.

The Duchess of South Somerville
By Rikki Lyn Hauss

The Duchess of South Somerville, a 179-page chronicle of Doris Duke, her legacy, her beloved mansion and its controversial demolition in 2016, offers a comprehensive view of what living on the Duke Estate was like. What makes it unique from other titles is that it is not specifically about Doris, but also about the people who worked there and who lived there and made their lives on the property as well.

The perspective that it gives offers a new light on Doris Duke in that you could see through others what she was like at home when she let her walls down and could be herself without being afraid of the paparazzi or the tabloid writers. No other book focuses so much attention to the love she had for the property.

Four months after its publication, The Duchess of South Somerville was nominated for three national book awards.

Written by Rikki Lynn Hauss, a 2012 graduate of Hillsborough High School, The Duchess of South Somerville has also been nominated for the 2018 IPPY Awards in three categories.

“I’m still digesting how amazing this news is,” said the author. “I really am surprised to think that so early in the game I would have something like this to show,” she added. “Something like this takes years to accomplish.”

The IPPY* (Independent Publisher’s Book Awards) awards have served to recognize independently-written and published books for 22 years on an annual basis. Medals are awarded in 83 hard-copy book categories, 12 regional categories, 11 e-book categories, and 8 unique awards per year. Copies can be purchased through https://sites.google.com/site/theduchessbookstore/home.

*IPPY judging is based on quality of content, originality, design, and production with an emphasis on innovation and social relevance. Judges includes experts from the fields of editing, design, reviewing, bookselling and library. The awards program is open to all members of the independent publishing industry, and authors and publishers worldwide who produce

George Papawick: How One Man Changed Manville
By Patricia L. Papawick Beronio

Because Patricia Papawick Beronio wanted her children and grandchildren to understand what an exceptional man their grandfather was, she has written a biography subtitled, “How One Man Changed Manville.”

Known as Mr. Manville, George Papawick was involved in many aspects of community life. For thirty years he dedicated his life to improving Manville, without pay, while working three rotating shifts at the Johns-Manville plant to support his family.

Throughout the years George served on the Election Board and the Board of Education and was the chairman of the Red Cross and the Republican Party. In addition, he was elected to council and then as mayor four times.

Filled with newspaper clippings, the book is truly a daughter’s tribute to her father. Copies can be purchased by contacting the author at patriciaberonio@verizon.net.
Alexander Hamilton and the Development of American Law
By Kate Elizabeth Brown

Alexander Hamilton is commonly seen as the standard-bearer of an ideology-turned-political party, the Federalists, engaged in a struggle for the soul of the young United States against the Anti-Federalists, and later, the Jeffersonian Republicans. Alexander Hamilton and the Development of American Law counters such conventional wisdom with a new, more nuanced view of Hamilton as a true federalist, rather than a one-dimensional nationalist, whose most important influence on the American founding is his legal legacy.

In this analytical biography, Kate Elizabeth Brown recasts our understanding of Hamilton’s political career, his policy achievements, and his significant role in the American founding by considering him first and foremost as a preeminent lawyer who applied law and legal arguments to accomplish his statecraft. In particular, Brown shows how Hamilton used inherited English legal principles to accomplish his policy goals, and how state and federal jurists adapted these Hamiltonian principles into a distinct, republican jurisprudence throughout the nineteenth century.

When writing his authoritative commentary on the nature of federal constitutional power in The Federalist, Hamilton juxtaposed the British constitution with the new American one he helped to create; when proposing commercial, monetary, banking, administrative, or foreign policy in Washington’s cabinet, he used legal arguments to justify his desired course of action. In short, lawyering, legal innovation, and common law permeated Alexander Hamilton’s professional career.

Cape May Through Time
By Joan Berkey and Dr. Joseph Salvatore

As early as 1776, the resort of Cape May in southern New Jersey was recognized as a popular, healthy place for bathing in the Atlantic Ocean. The hotels were boarding houses erected in the early 1800s, and by 1850 the town had nearly two dozen, all built of wood. The establishment of railroad service in 1863 brought a new era of growth and more fashionable hotels.

Hailed as the “queen of seaside resorts,” Cape May attracted tourists from Philadelphia, Baltimore, and even the Deep South, many of whom built summer cottages along the oceanfront.

A devastating, 35-acre fire in 1878 destroyed seven hotels and more than thirty cottages in the heart of town, but they were quickly replaced with new ones adorned with broad porches and lavished with gingerbread trim. Today, most of the city is a National Historic Landmark in recognition of its well-preserved collection of Victorian-era buildings, considered the best assemblage east of the Mississippi River.

Books in the “America Through Time” series use historic photos matched with modern views in a then-and-now format. Similar books from New Jersey include Somerville Through Time and The Millstone Valley Through Time.
